Wareable's verticals are based on our reader's passions

Connected fitness tech
Fitness trackers from the likes of Fitbit and Garmin have taken the world by storm, and their popularity shows no sign of abating.

Smartwatches and hybrids
Led by Apple, smartwatches have started gaining serious ground with fashion brands such as Fossil, Tag Heuer and Hugo Boss.

Virtual reality
Virtual reality surged in popularity in 2016, with the launch of the PlayStation VR, as well as Oculus Rift, HTC Vive and Google Cardboard.

Running and sports
Tech from the likes of Garmin and Polar mean that amateur athletes can train like the pros. Wareable is the biggest source of guides and tips online.

Smart health
Connected technology can help us take control of our own health and huge names are jumping on board. Health is becoming a consumer tech trend.

Tech and wellbeing
Slouching, sitting and stress are the smoking of our generation, but tech is increasingly out to help our wellbeing and becoming a huge market.
The smart home is the most exciting area of consumer tech and The Ambient is fast becoming the voice of authority in that space.

Evidence shows that the smart home has huge buying intent, but is hampered by confusion around its potential, ease of integration and usefulness.

The Ambient is designed to help people buy and use their devices, and includes a lot more practical content covering all major ecosystems, to inspire confidence and to match the way people want to choose and use smart home technologies.

The Ambient is already proving to be a huge success, reaching over 300,000 unique users per month, after its launch in January 2018. Like the smart home market, it’s growing fast.
Expert reviews

Buying tech in this brave new world is especially confusing – and the wearable tech and smart home markets continue to pose challenges for consumers.

Wareable Media Group produces buying guides concerning all aspects of smart tech, helping people to choose the best device for them and get a good deal from reputable sources.
